

Finite Element Analysis

For more challenging applications, usually involving OEM parts, Thermoseal applications engineers will utilize finite element analysis to perform a complete study of the components and the behavior of gasket materials in the customer's joint. The result is a very precise and detailed account of all the important conditions and considerations, since the computer can perform many iterations using different geometries, gasket designs and gasket materials.